Presenters: Katie Davenport, Lindsay Hansard

Faculty Sponsor: Dr. John Greenfield

Location: PAC 214

Peer Evaluation: A Roadmap to Professional Growth and Development

The peer review process has become recognized as an essential component of current nursing practice from The American Nurses Association, Magnet Nursing Standards, and The Institute of Medicine (2010). Peer review has also been identified as a key element to the nursing profession in assuring competency, autonomy, and professional development. Clinical nurses must not continue disregarding the important function that peer review has in providing quality care to patients.

Implementation of a formal peer review will allow nursing to be recognized in society as a mature profession with a system in place to hold persons accountable for the delivery of safe, quality care.

Presenter: Melissa L. Burchett, BSN, RN, CCM

Faculty Sponsor: Dr. Kay Mueggenburg

Location: PAC 215

Setting the UN Security Council Agenda: Legitimacy or Self-Interest?

Does the United Nations Security Council appropriately pursue the UN Charter goal of international peace and security? Or does it more narrowly pursue the parochial interests of the five veto powers? Does the UNSC agenda adequately reflect the most pressing global conflicts? Or is it skewed toward conflicts in which the veto powers have military and economic interests?

Presenter: Dr. Brian Frederking

Location: PAC 222

Chemistry Thesis

The presentation will be about the results found through experimentation on the thesis statement “Determination of Unsaturated versus Saturated Fat Content of Different Kinds of Nuts Using the Bomb Calorimetry.” It will be presented via PowerPoint using knowledge from research and briefly explaining the procedures and instrumentation used during experimentation.

Presenter: Tara Stacey
Faculty Sponsor: Dr. Feza Ozturk
Location: PAC 220, 10:00 – 10:25

Modeling Dynamics of HIV Recombination

Senior Honors Program thesis presentation. The ability of Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) to persist in a host despite a strong immune response is thought to be driven by its high mutation rate and its potential to form new genetic sequences via recombination. In this study, Anthony investigates mathematical models of different levels of complexity that predict HIV evolution via recombination during the first months post-infection. By estimating the parameters of these models using experimental data, he evaluates whether it is necessary to assume that recombinant viral variants possess an inherent fitness advantage over non-recombinant viral variants in order to match data from HIV-infected patients.

Presenter: Anthony Rhoads
Faculty Mentor: Dr. Heather Dye
Location: PAC 222, 10:00 – 10:25

Using Stereoscopic Imaging Techniques to Produce a Three-Dimensional View

Senior Honors Program thesis presentation. This presentation will introduce the concepts of stereo vision, the Correspondence problem, and image disparity which play a crucial role in computer vision and scene reconstruction. By applying these concepts, a computer is able to create a three dimensional view of the world around it using nothing more than two dimensional images.

Presenter: Kevin Schaefer
Faculty Mentor: Dr. Jim Feher

Taken at Facebook Value: How People Interact Over the Internet

Senior Honors Program thesis presentation. This presentation is about the Internet and how people interact with others within it in comparison to how they act outside of it. Today, people from around the world are connected to the World Wide Web, but the convenience has also allowed various people to take advantage of the anonymity that being on the other side of a computer screen presents. The results of how McKendree students play into these behaviors will be examined in this presentation.

Presenter: Danny Mannix

Faculty Mentor: Dr. Tami Eggleston

Location: PAC 222, 11:25 – 11:50

A Data-Driven Approach to Incorporating Expert Knowledge in the Fuzzy-Product-Limit Estimator

The Product-Limit Estimator (PLE) is a method to estimate a survival curve and mean time of survival with right-censored data. In small data sets with many censored values. The Fuzzy-PLE improves upon this estimate by considering information from a patient's current survival time, the mean survival time of similar patients, and expert knowledge. In this project, the feasibility of incorporating patient information in the Fuzzy-PLE as "expert knowledge" is explored.

Presenter: Anthony Rhoads

Faculty Sponsor: Dr. Kian Pokorny
